¹ All persons listed are generally revered as Saints unless specifically noted to be a confessor or beatified. Martyrs are revered automatically as saints, but we distinguish in this list merely for the sake of interest and additional identification.

² Not all saints are patrons. Conversely, many saints are patrons of more than one place, event, occupation or other circumstance. For purposes of this list, we have chosen to select the most widely known patronage(s) for the saints.

³ Many saints, martyrs and the beatified have more than one feast day, depending on where, or the circumstances under which, they are revered. For purposes of this list, if the Church (as a whole body) has designated a feast day, it is the one shown in this list; if not, every attempt is made to show what dates are known. Some saints do not have a known, specific feast day, and therefore one is not shown.

⁵ Charlemagne's cultus developed in about the year 1166, and was most recently confirmed by Pope Benedict XIV, prior to his ascension to the papacy. Charlemagne is venerated at Aachen, Germany.

- ⁶ Found on older lists of Beatified and Venerated individuals. See, e.g., Agnes B.C. Dunbar, Dictionary of Sainly Women, 2 vols. (London: George Bell & Sons, 1904).
- ⁷ Her identity as Ingegerd, daughter of King Olof III of Sweden is called into question by a 1930s report of Russian scientists who opened the tomb believed to be hers, and upon performing scientific analysis, determined that her presumed remains were of a woman in her late 20s or early 30s. This discovery casts doubt on the identity of St. Anne as the daughter of Olof, and other hypotheses have been proffered suggesting she was either the first wife of Jaroslav of Kiev or King Olof's own younger sister. However, because of the strong following and belief to the present day that she is Olof's daughter named Ingegerd, and barring future information to the contrary, the Society chooses to accept her identity as such.
- ⁸ Some question remains about whether Irene should be revered as a saint. Although zealous in her efforts to restore monasteries and iconography in her lifetime, which resulted in her praise by some as a saint, she was not canonized. Equally, while Western sources claim canonization for her, these claims seem to be unsupported by official liturgical reference in the Orthodox church, and even Nikodemos the Hagiorite fails to mention her. We include her conditionally.
- ⁹ The feast day of King St. Tiridates III is celebrated on the Saturday after the 5th Sunday after Pentecost.
